Open Access

Department for Research Support offers information and guidance on Open Access publishing, such as types of publishing, Open Access journals, publishing charges (APC) and discount schemes.

At UCPH researchers are encouraged to publish research as Open Access in CURIS, but the invitation must not block for researchers publishing in periodicals that do not allow Open Access publishing.

Visit the Research Portal for more guidance on Open Access publishing.

Dansk version af formularen

The post-print (also called 'Author Accepted Manuscript, 'AAM' or 'AM') is the version of the article that has been peer reviewed and accepted for publication, but before layout and type-setting by the publisher.

'Proofs' and 'offprints' are not post-prints and may not be deposited in CURIS or other repositories.

Guide on how to obtain post-prints

The pre-print (also called 'Work in Progress' or 'Submitted Version') is the version of the article submitted to the journal but before it has been peer reviewed and finally accepted for publication.

Publisher's version (also called 'Version of Record' or 'VoR') is the final published version of the article. It is formatted with the publisher's layout and volume and issue number. Unless the article is published as Open Access in a golden or hybrid journal (subscription journals that offer Open Access after payment of a publishing fee), the publisher's version may not generally be made Open Access.

OPEN ACCESS

SUBMISSION FORM

University of Copenhagen is focused on providing Open Access to as many of its publications as possible.

If your article is not available as Open Access on the journal's website, an earlier version of the article, e.g. preprints, can be made Open Access. This type of Open Access is called Green Open Access and is free.

Use the form to submit these early versions of your articles (including conference proceedings in journals).

Copenhagen University Library will then make your article available as Open Access in CURIS in accordance with the law.

The form cannot be used for articles published before 2018.

Please notice

By uploading your publication, you grant permission for Copenhagen University Library to upload it to the Research Portal. The upload must contain a cover sheet with reference to the final version, bibliographic metadata and any special requirements from your publishers.

Figures and illustrations in the post-print

It sometimes happens that figures etc. are sent in separate files, e.g. in separate Word or pdf files. If you as author want figures and illustrations to be included in the text document itself, you must do this yourself before the post-print is sent to the library. You can also merge the files into one pdf. Here you can use the free online service Smallpdf.
